Teaching through every moment

Origin jersey sparks coaching highlight

Not everyone can coach a female rugby league team but it's all in a day's work for teacher Cameron Love.

Cameron is the Curriculum Middle Leader in Maths and Science at St Saviour's College in Toowoomba.

He includes being asked by a group of girls to prepare them for an upcoming Gala Day of Rugby 9s as one of the memorable highlights of his career.

"The girls decided I was best for the job because I proudly wore my Queensland jersey on State of Origin days," Mr Love said.

"Just by chance a new door opened in my life and this opportunity was added onto my already colourful life."

It was the joy and satisfaction of running tutorial groups at university that convinced Mr Love to undertake a postgraduate degree in education and become a secondary school teacher.

"The joy I got out of seeing others grow and understand convinced me to take the leap into post graduate study which led me to become a teacher," he said.

Mr Love is motivated to help each student reach their potential.

"I enjoy the challenge of each unique student and finding the best way to teach them alongside their 20 or more classmates," he said.

Although Mr Love has been teaching since 2006, he never tires of the job.

"Each day is unique, teaching can be exhausting but it will never be a boring job," he said.

"You get to create your own work environment, there's no cubicle to sit at for the whole day but a classroom of endless opportunities to inspire the next generation in your own creative and exciting way."
